Remember how long you have been putting off these things, and how often you have received an opportunity from the gods, and yet do not use it. You must now at last perceive of what universe you are a part and from what administrator of the universe your existence flows, and that a limit of time is fixed for you, which if you do not use for clearing away the clouds from your mind, it will go and you will go, and it will never return. -- Marcus Aurelius, Meditations

Any time you discuss any of these words and many abstract nouns like them, you are going to touch a nerve. That's our job, to touch a nerve and get people to listen, define their terms, and work toward consent. Educators should focus on the meaning of these words without imposing their own curved intentions. Read The High Road to learn more about the epistemology of meaning,
